SPADE- SIRCLE- Application Guidelines

Often trapped in pursuits of a meaningful expense of our time, the significance of the leisurely vagabond day dreamer is little realized. The lacuna of a forum in the country which indulges in an experimentation of ideas otherwise labeled esoteric, is evident. SIRCLE, Spade India Research Cell, an offshoot of SPADE India emerges here.

SIRCLE endeavours to create an archive of compacted understandings of our built environments, expressed in different media to nurture critically creative thinking in all our realms that we believe impacts architecture and design.

SIRCLE: proposes to invite professionals and experts to conduct, guide and direct research projects, programmes, not merely of archival significance alone, but even that which maybe of direct relevance to the practise itself; an inter-practise research, post-operative studies and impacts of design interventions and ideas. These could be in the areas of product and material studies, design, architectural theory, landscape and urban design, both as new theories and proposal or experiments.

 We invite 500 word abstracts on pertinent topics, which once accepted will then be funded as a three month intensive research on the topic. The research will undergo an editing process between the writer and our editors and advisers. The right to publish or to veto the final work remains with SIRCLE.
